✠ Introduction ✠

Far speeding at their Order's broad command,
Whose powers the bonds of potent Knighthood lend,
From all their posts full compassed of the land
Are conjured here the hosts of that proud band
Whose themes chivalric faith and valor blend;

As in the days when fought brave Templar men,
Beneath their banners, cross, and beauseant meeting,
With hearts of high ideals now as then,
For types of by-gone glories reared again
A Christian Nation gives fraternal greeting.

THE Twenty-sixth Triennial Conclave of the Grand Encampment of Knights Templar of the United States, held in Boston within the last week of August, 1895, is destined to be remembered as the culmination of the development of the Order up to that time, and as a stimulus to still greater growth in numbers and influence, for which it afforded a point of new departure.

There was peculiar fitness in this magnificent display of Knight Templar power, occurring as it did in the city where the first chartered Lodge in America came into existence, and within the jurisdiction of the first Grand Commandery where the idea of expansion from local to general organization was formulated.

It was essentially a picturesque event, in fact, series of events; picturesque in its scenes, both official and unofficial; its grand massing of Knights Templars from all sections of the land, as well as representatives from some foreign kindred of the American jurisdiction; its pageanty, processions, music, oratory, and its decorations unrivalled in brilliancy and profusion.

In view of this element of picturesqueness, as well as this unique historic character, it is felt by the Sir Knights from end to end of the nation that the memory and inspiration of its vital picturing should not be suffered to lapse into a vague tradition, but should be preserved in such a descriptive and artistic Souvenir as is here presented.

In connection with the illustrative portion of this work, for which nothing has been spared to secure perfection by the latest resources of artist and artisan, it is also recognized that some such historical summary of its antecedents and verbal painting of its scenes should be given as will set forth the incidents in their full proportion and unity.

In presenting this Souvenir to the Sir Knights and other patrons of the work, the publishers feel confident that it will speak for itself, both as to magnitude of design and minuteness of detail, portraying as it does, in panoramic succession, the vivid scenes and incidents of the Triennial Conclave in Boston and the personalities that formed the moving power behind them.

Those who carried away with them very keenly outlined, but naturally transient, pictures of memory will be pleased to find that the scenes are now permanently reproduced with the blended attractions lent by artist and photographer, preserving for future reference the countenances of the officers of the Grand Encampment, the Grand Commandery of Massachusetts and Rhode Island, the Triennial, Executive, and Reception Committees, Official Representatives of all the Grand Commanderies, and of almost all their Subordinate Commanderies, associated with the brilliant series of events; the Headquarters of the various Committees and of the Commanderies, the Grand Stands, the decorated buildings, public and private, the admirable floral adornments of the Public Garden illustrative of Templar Symbolism, the scenes of the prize drills, and all other features that contributed their quota to the picturesque completeness.

Among the illustrations, that of R. Em. Sir Samuel C. Lawrence, Grand Commander of the Grand Commandery of Knights Templars of Massachusetts and Rhode Island and Chief Marshal of the Grand Parade, will undoubtedly attract attention, as did the original on the occasion of the parade; the knightly bearing of the rider and the unequalled beauty of the animal he mounted, being admired from the beginning to the end of the route. Immediately following him, the staff and aids made a fine grouping.

Neither time nor expense has been spared to make the series of illustrations in this work as complete in detail as they are excellent in finish, and if a face is found to be lacking in any division it must be attributed to the failure of the party most interested to respond to requests for his portrait.

While inviting attention to the varied and comprehensive contents, no word is necessary to claim merit for the quality of the illustrations, and it is desired here only to state that all have been set forth with unvarying fidelity, and the most painstaking efforts have been given to every essential feature with a view to making the work, both in its special and general effect, worthy of the undertaking and the unsurpassed event of which it is to be a permanent memorial.

It also seems appropriate to trace something of the character and development of Knight Templarism up to the period in view, involving its relations with Freemasonry, of which it has grown to be regarded as the most popular and rapidly-increasing outcome. This is done in a comprehensive and accurate manner in the article in this work by V. Em. Sir Rev. Henry W. Rugg, Grand Senior Warden of the Grand Encampment of the United States.

However unappreciated the relationship between Freemasonry and Knight Templarism may be in other countries, it is certain that in the United States, the most flourishing field of both, it is an organic and historic kinship.

In noting the progress of Freemasonry in Boston it is to be remarked that, although it antedated the Knights Templars, its growth has proved greatest in the years of prosperity enjoyed simultaneously with Templarism.

Even before the opening events of the Revolution in Boston the spirit and work of Knight Templarism were introduced, though not under the fully organized form; and after the years of British occupancy, when many of the patriotic leaders were absorbed in the task with General Washington of securing independence from the mother country and the meetings were suspended, the spirit was kept alive, so that the year of siege was fittingly the only interval between the organization under British control and that under independent American jurisdiction.

Within four years after the perfecting of organic unity by the Masonic Lodges in Boston, under the established Grand Lodge of Massachusetts, Boston Encampment of Knights Templars, now the largest Commandery in America, was formed, and the mutual aid and progress have continued down to the present.

At the time when political anti-Masonry was at its height, when the Masonic Temple, on the corner of Tremont Street and Temple Place was dedicated in 1832, the six Commanderies of Knights Templars shared with nine Masonic Lodges then existing in Boston in braving the hostile demonstrations of opponents, and conducting the ceremonial with a public procession and appropriate ritual.

They had previously joined in the proud ceremonial of laying the corner-stone of Bunker Hill Monument, June 17, 1825, when that patriotic member of the fraternity, Lafayette, was the central figure of the day.

A Boston home, occupied later by all the Masonic bodies, was that in the building known as the Winthrop House, on the site occupied by the present Temple, a place that represented for them scenes of gratification and sorrow.

The former were the celebrations incident to the corner-stone laying in the spring of 1857, and its dedication on the 29th of December, 1859. At the latter date the Commanderies of Knights Templars in Boston had doubled in number, as compared with the time of dedicating the previous Temple, and the number of Lodges had done the same, having increased to eighteen.

The scenes of sorrow in connection with the Winthrop House are described with vividness in Masonic records; telling of the sudden destruction of the building by fire, April 6, 1864, and the manifestations of regret which the fraternity, including the Knights Templars, experienced on being so unexpectedly called to leave a Masonic home which had been connected in their minds with many interesting and congenial associations, and to learn of the destruction of many of their important records and valuable papers. In some cases the original charters were burned, and various expedients became necessary in order to supply the deficiency. In this loss of charters the Knights Templars were the principal sufferers.

Of this event there has been a recent reminder, though on a less destructive scale, in the fire which took place in the upper portion of the present Temple,—that on the corner of Tremont and Boylston Streets,—Saturday, September 5, 1895, a few days after the close of the Triennial Conclave held therein, which the present work is designed to commemorate.

While looking forward to the time when they would begin the building of this last structure, the Knights Templars moved with the other bodies of the fraternity to the old Thorndike Hall on Summer Street, which is associated in the memories of many, with the adjacent structure that was the predecessor of the present Trinity Church, — the famous edifice in which the most interesting religious occasion of Conclave week took place.

The ceremonies incident to the laying of the corner-stone of the present Masonic Temple in 1864, and the dedication on St. John's Day, 1867, were of joint interest, when the marked development of Templarism in Boston was manifested by the increased number of Sir Knights and their imposing appearance in the procession.

The latter was one of the most stately demonstrations of its character that ever took place in Boston, though not rivalling in magnitude the immense procession that formed a central feature of the recent Triennial Conclave. Among the active participants was the President of the United States, Andrew Johnson, a member of the fraternity, who also attended the official banquet, and made a post-prandial speech of appreciation.

Previous to this event the growth of Knight Templarism in the United States was slow, as compared to that witnessed in recent years.

In order to appreciate the growth of the Order of Knights Templars in something more than a half-century, it is to be noted that at the Fifth Triennial Conclave, which was held in Baltimore, in November, 1832, within the period of anti-Masonic excitement, the attitude of this body, in its connection with Masonry, was said to be in a critical condition. When Boston was first made the location of a Triennial Conclave, in 1838, there were only four Grand Commanderies representing the organization by States.

To exemplify local growth, it may be stated that within the period from 1850 to this second holding of a Triennial Conclave in Boston, August 27-30, 1895, the number of Sir Knights in the Grand Commandery of Knights Templars of Massachusetts and Rhode Island increased from 500 to 11,499,—the latter being the number as officially stated at the Eighty-ninth Annual Conclave of this Grand Commandery on October 31, 1895.

A net gain of 1,117 was made during the last year, largely due to the holding of the Triennial Conclave within its jurisdiction. As to the national membership, it is to be noted that there are now in the United States thirty-nine Grand Commanderies, 972 subordinate Commanderies, and about 111,000 members.

The scenes and incidents anticipatory of the arrival in Boston of the delegations of Knights Templars from all sections were of a highly interesting character, the metropolitan centre of New England being wrought up to a rare degree of expectancy by the unprecedented preparations made by the Triennial Committee of the Grand Commandery of Massachusetts and Rhode Island and of its subordinate Commanderies, and the prospects of an immense and widely representative concourse.

On Sunday, and Monday, August 25-26, the number and diversity of arrivals of Commanderies of Knights Templars and delegations, many accompanied by ladies, from all sections were so varied and continuous that the streets were full of animation, and the sounds of martial music, the elaborate decorations, and the interest manifested by the visitors in the historic localities and memorials of Boston, enhanced the excitement of the occasion.

One of the most interesting circumstances connected with the Grand Parade, Tuesday, August 27th—and that of a character which could be duplicated in no place outside of Boston—was that over the entire route, as the organizations moved along, they were treading on historic ground, or were in sight of objects calculated to inspire patriotic and notable Masonic memories.

The earlier portions of the route on the Back Bay might be said to represent the comparatively unhistoric part of Boston, and, with substantial reasons, for the major part of it was under water a generation ago. And yet it could also be said to have a historic significance of its own, for it typified the mighty stride of development which modern Bostonians have made in reclaiming the three-hilled peninsular of Old Shawmut from the flowing tide, which, as Emerson said, “took Boston in her arms twice a day.”

From the point at which the procession started on Commonwealth Avenue, and even from the streets running between it and the Charles River, there was one unbroken sweep of water, across which in that weary siege of Boston, in the winter of 1775-76, the hostile forces of George Washington and George III. looked toward each other with ominous regard.

It was across this water that the British forces under Percy and Pitcairn rowed to Cambridge that night of the 18th of April, 1775, when the tidings of their stealthy march on Lexington were heralded by Paul Revere, Grand Master of Masons in Massachusetts.

On the part at the most southerly end of the route, where the waters reached almost up to what is now Washington Street, the George Tavern was located, which was alternately defended and attacked by the British as a frontier point during the siege.

Immediately as the procession moved on Commonwealth Avenue, after leaving behind the historic memories revived by the statues of Hamilton, Garrison, and Glover, they saw in front, as they approached the Public Garden, Ball's gigantic equestrian statue of that foremost American and member of the Masonic Fraternity, General George Washington, who was in many ways associated with Boston history.

Three times the Father of his Country made a stay in Boston, each of his visits representing a typical stage of his career—as an officer attached to the forces in Virginia, a general taking command of the new American army, and a President giving his last greetings to a city that had seen his earliest trials and triumphs in the Revolution. Of each of these visits there are visible memorials throughout the old city and environs which deserve the attention of visitors.

On turning into Arlington Street, and noting the beautiful arches of welcome and the Knight Templar decorations in the Public Garden in honor of the Order, the processionists found it difficult to realize that all this delightful ground was within a comparatively short time wrested from the swamp of the Back Bay, and that before these improvements there was no land to be seen until the eye reached the nearest edge of Boston Common, where, during the siege of Boston, the British constructed their entrenchments, and watched grimly to guard against the expected time when Washington would cross the water from Cambridge to attack their position.

Immediately on turning into Boylston Street, and passing the Hotel Brunswick, the Headquarters of the Grand Commandery of Massachusetts and Rhode Island, they entered Copley Square, where they noted one of the picturesque groups of buildings in the city, including Trinity Church, regarded by many as the best piece of ecclesiastical architecture in America; the Museum of Fine Arts, the New Old South Church, and the new Public Library, which is conceded to be one of the best in the world.

The broad sweep of Columbus Avenue gave a good example of modern Boston's street-making, constructed, as it is, on made land. On rounding Massachusetts Avenue into Washington Street, they reached the great avenue which may be said to have formed the major portion of the route, and which is the scene of much that is of striking interest in Boston's history.

The first spot of unique interest was that reached almost immediately after entering this street, the site of the gallows where pirates, murderers, and marauders were executed in the early days. The southerly boundary of Old Boston was located here, the gallows standing outside, and the fortifications inside. Near this point the procession passed Blackstone and Franklin Squares, on opposite sides of Washington Street, where were located the grand stands, devoted to the Most Eminent Sir Hugh McCurdy, Grand Master of the Grand Encampment, His Excellency, Brother Frederic T. Greenhalge, Governor of Massachusetts, and other distinguished officials.

Near Dover Street, the site of another old line of British fortifications was noted,—defences which were made so elaborate that they were, in large measure, the cause that induced Washington to move around to Dorchester Heights in South Boston, for a basis of attack.

Much interest was aroused on passing the Old South Church, as it is regarded as a repository for old Massachusetts memories; and just opposite was the famous Province House, which was the mansion of the Royal Governors. The climax of the route, as regarded by many, was the passing of the Washington Street end of the Old State House, on the balcony of which the Father of his Country stood when he was greeted by the procession of citizens, on his visit soon after attaining the Presidency.

After being reviewed by R. Em. Sir Samuel C. Lawrence, Grand Commander and Chief Marshal, and Sir and Honorable Edwin U. Curtis, Mayor of Boston, at Adams Square, the procession was brought to a close in accordance with a prearranged plan by means of which all confusion was avoided, the whole arrangement eliciting the admiring comment of the people.

Unsurpassed by any decorations to be seen during Conclave week was the Masonic Temple when electrically adorned at night. With its symbolisms representing every grade of the York Rite, from the Blue Lodge as typified by the Square and Compasses at the base, to the Order of Knights Templars as indicated by the Cross and Crown at the summit, and the Cross of Salem, the insignia of the Grand Master of Knights Templar, in the centre, the whole enclosed by the majestic Templar Cross, it was an object of study, even apart from its artistic beauty.

In conclusion, it may be said that the combination of elements of interest and patriotic inspiration, including the gathering of fraternal representatives from all sections of the land, the day and night decorations, the magnificent parade, and the hospitable arrangements made for the entertainment of the Sir Knights by the Grand Commandery of Massachusetts and Rhode Island, made this Triennial Conclave one most worthy to be preserved in permanent memorial.

✠ The Order of Knights Templars ✠

States of America.

THE Order of Knights Templars is commonly classified among the legitimate branches of Freemasonry, although by a strict construction of terms the connection thus indicated is sometimes challenged. As a matter of fact, however, the modern organization of Knights Templars has always been in touch with the Masonic Organization, justifying, therefore, in their ordinary application, the use of the descriptive terms, "Templar Masonry" and "Masonic Templarism." It is Royal Arch Masons only who are eligible to apply for the Orders conferred in Templar Bodies; and in the ceremonies of these Orders there are many allusions to the forms and teachings of Freemasonry. Evidently there is a vital bond between the Masonic and Templar systems, however distinctive in many respects each may seem to be. American Templary includes three degrees or Orders, viz.: Knight of the Red Cross, Knight Templar, Knight of Malta. The first degree relates to the rebuilding of the Temple in Jerusalem, and the ceremony as enacted under Templar sanctions takes on a large measure of attraction, while it impresses lessons of moral significance.

While the Order of Knight of the Red Cross sustains no distinctive relation to the Chivalric Orders, it is not without a certain fitness of preparation for Templar preferment. This is the position taken by the late Sir George C. Connor, of Tennessee, who says: "As Judaism was a preparation for Christianity, so let the Illustrious Order of the Red Cross be a preparation for the Christian Order of the Temple." Even if the unity of Jewish and Christian teachings, in the system of American Templarism, seems somewhat incongruous, we still have cause for great satisfaction that the moral inculcations in the Red Cross ritual have no uncertain sound. Truth is represented as the most exalted virtue, and there is an explicit recognition of Deity as the one living and true God.

Just where and when the Red Cross degree originated cannot be determined. Thomas Smith Webb is sometimes credited with its parentage; but it is clearly shown that the degree was worked in Chapters of Royal Arch Masons, perhaps in other Masonic organizations, before Webb entered upon the work of moulding the system of American Templarism. Undoubtedly he rendered an important service in adapting the degree for the position accorded it as the first grade of the Templar system.

Another Appendant Order is that known as the Knight of Malta, the ritual of which embodies excellent lessons of faith and morals suggested by St. Paul's shipwreck and consequent visit to the Island of Malta. This Order, while occupying a subordinate place in the Templar institution, is entitled to more consideration than it commonly receives. Assuredly this is the case if we accept the history and traditions which connect the modern Order with the Ancient Hospitallers, whose organic life began before that of the Templars and continued long after the suppression of that Order. The Knights Hospitallers,—Brothers of St. John,—organized on a Christian basis, rendered a large measure of heroic and benevolent service in the days of the Crusades. They displayed equal valor with the brave Templars, while at the same time they wrought efficiently in ministering to the sick and caring for the destitute. Tracing its descent from such a source, the modern Order of Malta would seem to be something more than an insignificant appendage to other and more exalted Orders.

The distinctive character of American Templarism is expressed, however, by the important grade which constitutes its title. It is as the Order of Knights Templars that it is known and classified among other societies, and by this name its distinguishing features are grouped together. Bearing this appellation, it gathers and puts to use many of the traditions, lessons, and legends of that old historic Order which was so grandly prominent in the Middle Ages. It may not be claimed that there are any direct lines of alliance between the ancient Templars and the modern organization; but there is a traditional connection, a well-understood relation of sign, symbol, and word, between the Templar Order as it now exists and the ancient Body from which it takes its name. It is a flavor of the old heroic spirit pervading modern Templary which gives to it a delightful charm; it is the lessons, symbols, and associations, linked with the stirring period of the Crusades, which greatly add to the impressiveness of ceremonies enacted in conformity with the present Templar ritual; and it is a sentiment derived from that chivalric age when the best expression of Christian knighthood represented courage, honor, truth, courtesy, and the purpose to help the weak and suffering, which gives character to the Templar institution as it now exists.

Masonic Templarism builds upon the record which the valiant Templars of the Middle Ages made for themselves. The heroic past is always a powerful incitement; and intelligent Knights Templars of the present time turn their mental vision earnestly to the Body which was so powerful centuries ago.

The Order of Knights Templars was instituted in the year 1113. Its founders were a valiant Burgundian Knight, Hugh de Payens, and eight other brave and true men, animated by the military and religious fervor of the times, who bound themselves by a vow to the Patriarch of Jerusalem to protect pilgrims to the Holy City and to live pure and wholesome lives. They first took the name of "Poor Fellow Soldiers of Jesus Christ," but in the year 1118, when they were given an establishment near the ancient temple of King Solomon, they took the name of "Poor Soldiers of the Temple," subsequently abbreviated into "Knights Templars." There is an imperishable record of their service of valor and benevolence in Palestine during the period of the Crusades; and it may well be said that the ancient Templars did their greatest work and gained their chiefest glory in the Holy Land. Side by side with the Knights Hospitallers they fought bravely for the defence of the Holy Land and the Christian Faith. At last, when the immense forces of the Moslems were combined against them, they were driven out of Palestine, their renowned stronghold, Acre, where they made a final stand, falling in the year 1291.

After their retirement from Palestine, and notwithstanding the waning of the spirit which had prompted the Crusades, the Templar organization acquired a remarkable degree of outward prosperity, its influence being felt in all the Christian countries of Europe. In both England and France the Templars obtained popular favor, and exercised a political power which was recognized by kings and people. They acquired vast estates, and expended their wealth with a free hand. They flourished as a potent and most useful organization. After Hugh de Payens, who died in 1136, the chair of Grand Master of Knights Templars was successively filled by twenty-one other most distinguished men of Europe, under whose leadership there was an attractive expression of the highest quality of that chivalry which bears the stamp of the Middle Ages.

The last of the line of these Ancient Grand Masters was Jacques de Molai, greatly distinguished as a gallant soldier, and as a wise and skilful director of any enterprise with which he was allied. He was elected Grand Master of the Templars in 1297, and applied himself with characteristic energy to the discharge of the duties devolving upon him as the head of the Order.

Soon after his accession to office a tide of adverse influences rolled in upon the Templars and upon their illustrious Grand Master. Serious charges were brought against them, including the most absurd accusations of idolatrous and immoral practices. Many Templars were arrested and put in prison; some were tortured and afterwards put to death. De Molai was burned at the stake March 18, 1313. He died as a brave Christian martyr, proclaiming with his latest breath his own innocence and the innocence of the Order. Then followed a confiscation of the large possessions of the Order, both in France and in England, while its members were proscribed and persecuted in almost every country of Europe.

A remnant survived the persecution, and united with the Hospitallers, who had taken possession of the Island of Rhodes in the Mediterranean, and there flourished and grew strong until driven from the island by Solomon the Magnificent in 1522. The Island of Malta was afterward made their home and final stronghold. This island was captured by Napoleon in 1798. The suppression of the Order in England may be reckoned from the time of King Henry VIII., in the sixteenth century; but in France, perhaps, only from the time of the Directory, in 1792.

The suppression of the Ancient Order of the Temple is an unquestioned fact, and it matters little whether the date of its overthrow and extinction is fixed in the fourteenth, the sixteenth, or the eighteenth century. It is to the earlier date, however, that reference must be made in determining the main causes which led to the downfall of a great and powerful institution. It is then that the student of history notes the persecuting fury of Philip, Clement, and others, who feared the influence of so strong and wealthy a body, and coveted its immense possessions. No intelligent person to-day credits the base charges brought against the Templars of the fourteenth century. Doubtless they had grown proud and haughty in the time of their great prosperity and had become less sensitive to the incitements of a lofty spiritual purpose; but they still upheld a worthy standard, and rendered the services of a large-hearted and free-handed philanthropy. Their history from beginning to end is an illumined record which will forever attract heroic souls.

It is an open question whether the suppression of the Ancient Templars carried with it the annihilation of the Order. Under the "Charter of Transmission" a claim is made for the preservation of the life of the organization, in attestation of which a reference is made to a succession of Grand Masters extending through all the centuries since the death of de Molai. But Masonic Templarism does not seek to establish this continuity, nor does it attempt to connect itself historically with the ancient system or Order. It does not build on such assumptions. The historical connection between Masonic Knights Templars and the warrior soldiers of Palestine is more than doubtful, as is any assumed identification of the modern society with the Order which flourished at the time of or after the Crusades. In the opinion of what seems the best authority, the ancient Order of Templars left no successors. It may not be claimed that Masonic Templarism of the nineteenth century is one and the same with the Order instituted by Hugh de Payens and his associates; or with the Brotherhood of the Temple as afterwards organized; but there are lines of resemblance in sentiment and in faith, as well as in distinctive rites and purposes, and the traditional connection may be properly preserved and emphasized.

If the foregoing statements are accepted, it follows that Masonic Templarism is comparatively a modern institution, and it likewise follows that there is no ground for the assumption that the ancient Templar Order was the protector of Freemasonry. Such a relation has been claimed. "The professed object of the Ancient Templars," says one Masonic writer, "was to protect Christian pilgrims in Palestine, but the real and primary purpose was to practice and preserve the rites and ceremonies of Freemasonry." To make a statement of this kind is to ignore the well approved facts of history. While on the one hand, there is no evidence to justify the theory that the Craftsmen of the Middle Ages organized the Templar Order, so, on the other hand, there is just as little proof to support the proposition which assumes that Freemasonry was fostered by the Ancient Templars. Historically considered, the organic life of Freemasonry dates from the year 1717. But go back to the seventeenth century, or even an earlier period, in tracing the evolution of the Masonic system and institution, there is yet absolutely no justification for the endeavor to make it appear that Freemasonry is the child of the Ancient Order of the Temple.

In this connection it may well be remarked that in the middle of the eighteenth century, and especially near the close of that century, Templary and Freemasonry existed in very close relations, thus suggesting the statement so often repeated, viz: "That the same great principles which govern one govern both." But still the lines of lineage are different, and there are distinctions and differences between Freemasonry and Templary, in system and in organization, which ought not to be obscured. This separateness may be recognized without affecting the proposition laid down at the beginning of this paper, that there is ample justification for the use of these common terms, "Masonic Templarism" and "Templar Masonry."

It is not possible to state just when, and where, and how the modern Order of Masonic Templarism originated. It may be regarded in some sense as an evolution, the present system having been developed through various processes and by a succession of directing and moulding forces. That a degree of Templary was known and sometimes conferred as an adjunct to Masonic degrees, both in this country and in Great Britain, in the latter part of the eighteenth century, admits of no question. There were at the first, however, no separate Templar bodies, and the conferring of the degree was by Lodges or Chapters working under Lodge warrants. An entry in the records of St. Andrew's Royal Arch Lodge, Boston, Mass., under date of Aug. 28, 1769, is as follows:

"The petition of Bro. William Davis coming before the Lodge, begging to have and receive the parts belonging to a Royal Arch Mason, which, being read, was received, and he unanimously voted in, and was accordingly made by receiving the four steps, that of Excellent, Super-Excellent, Royal Arch, and Knight Templar."

Bro. Wm. J. Hughan, commenting upon this record, of the authenticity of which there can be no doubt, says: "This minute contains the earliest known reference in the world to the degree of a Masonic Knight Templar." A few years later Kilwinning Lodge, No. 75, Dublin, Ireland, was conferring a degree of Knight Templar. In Scotland, at about the same period, there was some slight recognition of a Templar degree. Then followed, during the closing decade of the eighteenth century, the establishment of several "Encampments" in England, Ireland, and in this country. The history of these early organizations is fragmentary and obscure. It is sufficient in this connection to note the fact that such independent bodies were formed in Charleston, Philadelphia, Wilmington (Del.), Baltimore, New York, Hartford, Newburyport, Boston, Providence, and probably in other places where the Masonic Fraternity had become strong, and that thus were laid the foundations of the Order of Knights Templars as it now exists in this country. These early organizations, instituted under sanction of inherent right, or by authority of Scottish Rite bodies, or some other assumed superior power, had their scope and purposes somewhat differently defined. Some of the early Encampments had a precarious and short-lived existence, while others have preserved their organic life to the present time. The history or traditions relating to these first organizations have an abiding interest. Especially is this the case as regards the establishment of the Order in the localities already named, concerning which a brief additional mention may be made in this connection.

Maryland Encampment, Baltimore, claims an organization going back to 1790, in which year it is assumed to have con-

These two bodies, in 1805, with the approval of Newburyport Encampment, as may be inferred, formed a Grand Encampment, which claimed large powers, and which, at its second meeting, held March 3, 1806, declared that it would be known by the name of "The United States Grand Encampment." The organization continued to assert and exercise its asserted powers until 1816, when the words "United States" were stricken out of the title, and its authority was restricted to Massachusetts and Rhode Island.

Thomas Smith Webb was foremost in the establishment of the Grand Encampment organized as above stated. He was the first Grand Master of the body, holding this office from 1805 to 1817, and exercising a potent influence in its affairs alike in matters of ritual and government. That he was an able and enthusiastic Mason and Knight Templar admits of no question. He was a builder of acknowledged skill, and his works survive him and constitute his enduring memorial.

The Grand Encampment of Massachusetts and Rhode Island, thus brought into existence, is the oldest Grand Body of Masonic Knighthood on this continent. Sir Wm. S. Gardner, in referring to this fact, and to the progress of the Templar Order in the jurisdiction, uttered the following words of wholesome suggestion: "The history of our Grand Encampment teaches the important lesson of a firm reliance upon the Masonic Institution as the only hope of our prosperity and perpetuity. I am convinced that unless our Grand Encampment had been founded upon the Institution of Freemasonry, it could not have survived the trials and vicissitudes to which it has been exposed. It is upon this firm and stable foundation that we have erected our Temple of Knighthood. A divorce of these Orders,—Knighthood from the Institution of Masonry,—would lead to their total destruction and annihilation."

The General Grand Encampment of the United States was organized in New York, June 21, 1816. Thomas Smith Webb and Henry Fowle, both members of the Grand Encampment formed at Providence in 1805, were the leading spirits in the organization of the General Grand Body in New York. It should be borne in mind, as related to the proceedings to which reference is here made, that in 1816 the original Grand Encampment of Pennsylvania had ceased to exist, and in its place another Grand Body had been established, and that the Grand Encampment of New York had been formed but a short time previously. This was the situation when the Convention met in New York and constituted a General Grand Encampment. Delegates were present, chosen respectively by the Grand Encampment of Massachusetts and Rhode Island and the Grand Encampment of New York, and this united representation formed the "General Grand Encampment of Knights Templars and the Appendant Orders for the United States." From that date, June 21, 1816, forward, it has exercised authority according to its avowed functions. It now holds to its allegiance forty two Grand Commanderies, and about one thousand subordinate Commanderies. Upwards of one hundred and ten thousand Sir Knights are thus associated and pledged to its support.

A carefully prepared Constitution was adopted by the General Grand Encampment, and this elaborate paper is supposed to have been drawn by Thomas Smith Webb, who was called to fill the second office in the new organization—De Witt Clinton, of New York, having been elected General Grand Master. The original draft of the Constitution in the handwriting of Webb is now in the archives of St. John's Commandery, Providence. The Constitution of 1816 was not essentially changed until 1856. Then, at the Triennial Conclave held in Hartford, Conn., a considerable revision of the instrument was made. It was desired by some that the government and ritual should be brought into closer accord with the system of "Ancient Knights Templars." Radical changes, looking in this direction, were found to be impracticable, and the revision did little more than to elaborate and make more clear the distinguishing features of the organization. Several important changes in nomenclature were introduced in the amended Constitution. The word "General" was eliminated from the title, leaving the name of the Order as now: "The Grand Encampment," etc. By the revision of 1856, State Grand Bodies became Grand Commanderies, and local Bodies were required to substitute "Commandery" for "Encampment," and other changes of titles and procedure were approved. The Constitution, thus amended, has been but slightly changed since 1856; its essential character remains, made all the clearer by interpretations authoritatively announced from time to time and embodied in a code of statutes.

During the years since its establishment the Grand Encampment has gathered increasing favor and influence. There have been occasional fears of an undue centralization of authority in its hands; but latterly these fears appear to have been almost entirely dispelled. It has had the effect of nationalizing Templary, and of imparting to it a prestige and an influence which would not have attached to the Order had its life been expressed only in separate Grand Bodies. Under the most favorable auspices, representing material and moral strength, with unity of purpose and high aims, the Grand Encampment came to the holding of its Twenty-sixth Triennial Conclave, for the success of which the most confident anticipations had been entertained by Templars throughout the country. Many of the Triennial Conclaves have been occasions of special interest, marked by a large attendance of members of the Order and such a demonstration as has well attested the prosperous condition of the organization. Within the last twenty-five years these Triennial gatherings have grown in favor and attractiveness, while more elaborate preparations have been made for the meetings, parades, etc. The increase in membership and the devotion of Sir Knights to the Order have made possible a more attractive display at each successive Triennial occasion. That was a memorable pageant witnessed at Chicago when the Twenty-first Triennial Conclave was held in that city in 1880. Another remarkable expression of the strength of the Order was made at San Francisco in 1883; and the display at St. Louis, in 1886, surpassed—at least, in some respects—all previous demonstrations. At Washington, D. C., where the Grand Encampment met in October, 1889, the parade was estimated to have included twenty thousand Knights, and was reviewed by the President of the United States and many prominent officials. At Denver, in August, 1892, the parade is said to have included nearly as many Templars as marched in Washington, and to have been witnessed by a greater number of spectators. The demonstration in Boston at the Twenty-sixth Triennial was of a like notable character. The gathering included Commanderies and representative members of the Order from all parts of the country,—a mighty host, attended by music and banners, whose presence and movements attracted a widespread interest. The mighty host of visitors from near and from far were the recipients of a cordial welcome at the hands of the Grand Commandery of Massachusetts and Rhode Island, which numbers within its jurisdiction upwards of eleven thousand Sir Knights, and it is believed that the results of the Triennial gathering, as well as the legislation of the Grand Encampment Conclave, will be conducive to the best interests of the Order.

Masonic Templarism has made rapid advances in numbers and resources during the last quarter of a century. Its membership includes men of intelligence, character, and prominent citizenship in every jurisdiction. It has strength and influence for good by reason of such a membership, not less than by the prestige which comes from the past, the principles for which it stands, and the fraternal service which it renders. Hospitality is one of its distinguishing characteristics. In the ancient days a portion of the Order of St. John was designated as "Hospitallers," being set apart to reside in hospitals and in buildings erected for the accommodation of strangers, and to dispense a generous liberality to any who might be their guests in these temporary homes. The time has gone by for this special practice of hospitality, but not for the exercise of that knightly grace which welcomes the stranger guest and brother. Knights Templars, however, are only faithful to the old-time traditions and lessons of their Order when they evince a cordial fellowship and show forth a hospitality, not of the hand and the purse alone, but of the heart as well. Courtesy and hospitality are still enjoined in the impressive lessons of Templary. But there is a higher realm of thought and purpose, of faith and duty; for the Order of Knights Templars is essentially a Christian institution; it requires faith in the Son of God, whose sufferings, death, and resurrection are impressively commemorated in the ceremonies prescribed by its ritual, and it enjoins practical obedience to the precepts of Him who is "the Way, the Truth, and the Life."

It represents more than morality; it stands for religion itself; the religion established upon "the foundation of the Apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner-stone." Other organizations of a fraternal character may deal with the general principles which find expression in all systems of religion; but the Templar organization plants itself squarely upon the affirmations of Christianity, and binds its followers in the most solemn manner to accept and support the essential teachings of the Gospel. As regards this point there can be no question. Every Knight Templar rests under a solemn obligation to stand by the Christian religion to the very end, and to be a loyal follower of the Great Captain of his salvation. No church has a more impressive ritual in its order of service for the reception of members than the Templar ceremony, which belongs to the conferring of the Order upon candidates. Nor is it in word and ceremony alone that the Christian features of the Templar Order are set forth; for its symbols, banners, legends, and tokens are all significant of the position which it holds as an institution permeated by faith in a crucified and risen Lord.

The first mission of Templary is to point its members to the Cross as the glorified sign of moral beauty and significance. It emphasizes the great central idea of Christian revelation that, for the redemption of sinful humanity, the eternal Son of God bowed Himself down on the Cross and gave His life for the world. Thus does it present a supreme motive to highest living; thus does it seek to make the lives of men better and more productive in works of good, while their souls are drawn toward God and heaven.

It declares its purpose to the Christian service. It pledges those who enter its asylum as members to be faithful followers of Him who said, "I am among you as one that serveth." It exists not for ornament, or merely to cultivate and express the goodly fellowship which may be expected to characterize brethren and friends. There are great principles to be maintained, and a practical service of love and helpfulness to be rendered. The men who instituted the modern Order, and gave it the stamp of the Masonic name, were wise to discern the moral power belonging to the ancient system, and they sought to utilize such an influence by recalling olden rites and symbols, and by giving foremost place to the Cross of Calvary. It is that Cross, with all that it signifies of faith and duty, which appeals most powerfully to every earnest and thoughtful member of the Order, and impels to noble work in the Master's name; such a service as is represented by the ritual in its exhortation "to distribute alms to poor and weary pilgrims travelling from afar; to feed the hungry; to clothe the naked, and to bind up the wounds of the afflicted." The members of the Templar Order, thus incited, can but realize the mission which they are called to fulfill in faithful service for love's sake, for truth's sake, and for Christ's sake.

Who can doubt that there is a place of honor and usefulness for the modern Order of Christian Knighthood? It stands for gentleness, hospitality, courtesy, magnanimity, and a divine charity; for the expression of a blessed fellowship, and a benign service such as the world most needs. As in the past, so now it represents the most sacred sentiments which appeal to the heart of humanity, and which prompt men to the fulfilment of the duties of related life; and thus it justifies its existence, as thus it claims the loving, loyal support of all true Knights Templars.
